Dear Hop:

We received your new production yesterday afternoon of more than 150 new letters from Fairchild to its customers regarding this suit, dating back as far as February 2006 (before the infringement trial), in addition to the schematics for two additional Fairchild products. Fairchild's delay in producing these materials is inexcusable, and we will take that issue up with the Court separately, but I wanted to write with respect to the schematics right away because the copies you belatedly produced are almost completely illegible.

Based on what we can tell from these poor copies, it appears, surprisingly, that the datasheets for certain Fairchild products may be inaccurate. Once we can confirm our understanding through a review of fully-legible schematics, which we expect you to provide immediately, we will advise the court if our review alters any assertions made with regard to the inclusion of certain parts in an injunction.

To permit us to complete our analysis, please produce as soon as possible legible copies of schematics for the FSQ0365RN and FSQ510 produced yesterday, as well as legible copies of schematics for the FSQ0170RNA, FSQ100, FSQ211, FAN7602B, and FSDM101 which do not appear equivalent to either of these parts and, therefore, require independent analysis.

Sincerely,

Howard G. Pollack
